Accelerating Women's Empowerment

Women in Asia are on average 70% less likely than men to be in the labor force, and this gap persists despite economic growth, decreasing fertility rates, and increasing education. This plenary will examine how stakeholders from intermediaries, government, foundations and corporates are all working to support women overcome these barriers to women entering the formal economy. The plenary will set the conversation on these issues as AVPN 2018 will look at the role that education, healthcare and livelihoods can play in creating pathways for women to develop and grow. Why is it important? As long as women remain part of the black economy, their impact is muted, their own economic situation remains perilous and they risk their long-term success being able to be pulled at any time by a make relative.

Foundations Journey into Impact Investing and Mission-Aligned Investments

AVPN, the Sasakawa Peace Foundation and Amala Paradigm will release a report – Leveraging the Full Spectrum of Philanthropic Capital towards Impact – detailing eight case studies from foundations across the US, Europe and Asia. The cases studies will showcase different pathways taken by the foundations in their journey towards impact investing. The report is intended to elucidate to the Foundations across Asia about the need to pursue impact investing.

This workshop will bring to life the key findings of this research by reporting the pathways that various types of foundation have taken up in leveraging the full spectrum of their philanthropic capital towards impact. The workshop will help the participants to identify similarities in their own journeys with those of the featured foundations, and will foster opportunities to learn from their peers’ progress towards venturing into impact investing.

The discussions will focus on the diverse set of impact investing strategies taken up by foundations including

- investing the endowment funds with an ESG lens,
- moving a part of all the endowment funds to Mission Related Investments or Program Related Investments,
- providing the investees with blended capital (grants and/or patient capital in combination with non-financial support), and
- investing into impact funds or co-investing with impact funds.

Innovative Financing in Gender

Organizations seeking the most effective way to maximize social impact in gender have led to the development of different forms of innovative financing. The breakout session will highlight the innovations that are being seen across the Asia-Pacific region to support the more rapid inclusion of women into the economy, to leverage their economic power and to boost growth through purchasing parity and equality in this sector. This session will draw on perspectives from different actors to discuss what different funding models look like, what approaches are being used to jointly solve complex problems in gender and how the joint efforts can add value to gender lens investing.

Investing in Sustainable Livelihoods

The World Bank has estimated that the number of people living in extreme poverty in the South Asia region has likely fallen to 13.5 percent of the region's population in 2015. Despite the impressive economic growth and resilience in South Asian countries, the region is still home to a large number of poor. Nearly 70 percent of the poor in South Asia, live in the lagging regions. Economic growth alone is not enough to bring the extremely poor out of poverty as they may not be capable enough to utilize the opportunities provided by the economic growth. Moreover, poverty as seen by the poor themselves may not be just the low income but is a multi-dimensional web of poor health, social exclusion, illiteracy, and overall despair.

There is a need for joining hands in alleviating this poverty by focussing on sustainable livelihood through collective investment in livelihood resources, livelihood strategies, and reviewing institutional processes and organizational structures. This session will explore the dynamics of collaboration, and investment for nurturing an ecosystem for sustainable livelihoods.

Scaling up Social Purpose Organizations

Support for Social Purpose Organisations (SPOs), which includes social enterprises and non-profit organisations, have grown in Asia through the provision of not just financial capital but human and intellectual capitals. We have seen an increase in boot-camps, incubation programmes and funding awards in the region to help SPOs conceptualise, launch and build minimal viable products. However, the momentum to support early stage SPOs does not seem to be sustained through to growth-stage as funders' risk appetite diminish. Intermediaries helping SPOs to accelerate also play a big role in equipping the success of investable deals. This session will look at who are the range of stakeholders in the social investment space and how they might enable SPOs to scale. It will also look at how these stakeholders are collaborating with each other, within their market and across the regions.

Big Data for Social Impact

Big data exists in just about everything we use and do these days and the potential of using this Big data to harness greater social impact is enormous. Big Data can be used to reduce information inequality and advance social good; enable economic growth and financial inclusion; increase transparency and enable users to make better decisions with regards to their giving are some the many possibilities. This session will highlight examples of cases whereby big data is being unlocked to create solutions to some of the world's greatest social issues. It will also discuss some of the greatest challenges and opportunities in capturing data accurately and efficiently.

Tackling Climate Change in Asia- Role of Philanthropy and Social Investors

Climate change presents a serious threat to Asia's economy, its people and ecosystems. Solutions exist to help transform Asian economies into a low carbon future but they need to be deployed at an unprecedented pace and scale if we are to keep emissions way below dangerous levels. This session will focus on how philanthropy and social investors can play a role in accelerating climate action in the energy and other relevant sectors in Asia as well as include cross-cutting environmental threats of air and water pollution. Representatives of philanthropic organizations will share their experiences in terms of grant-making on climate-related activities. Impact investors will then share their learning and challenges faced in looking for scalable business solutions for climate change.

Belt and Road and Opportunities for Greater Social Impact

The One Belt One Road initiative will bring trillions of dollars in infrastructure investments around the old Silk road route. The economic and trade related benefits are enormous but the social and environmental impact opportunities are large as well. China continues to face its own social challenges but the development strides that it has accomplished especially in the areas of poverty alleviation, health and education are impressive and there are opportunities to take those learnings and products to other developing countries.

Investing in Digital Inclusion and Last Mile Connectivity in Asia

The incredible proliferation of mobile phones and the internet offers a profound opportunity to increase the effectiveness and efficiency of social impact across key sectors in the region such as health, agriculture, education, and governance. However, only one in three people in the developing world are connected to the internet and within this, women are at a further disadvantage as the gap between men and women with access to internet reaches 25%. While many stakeholders in the social sector are underpinning their solutions on beneficiaries being able to be connected, significant barriers still persist for people in developing countries in Asia to effectively access the internet.

This session will explore the importance of access to mobile services and the internet for social impact solutions to be implemented, and more importantly scaled effectively in the social sector. How can impact be created if beneficiaries cannot access, have the means or financial ability to be able to adopt voice and internet connectivity? It will present innovative connectivity solutions that are emerging to reach low-income consumers in the most challenging markets and discuss the role that social investors can play to support and scale these market-based solutions.

Financing Solutions to Climate Change- An Action Planning workshop

Asia is considered to be one of the most threatened and vulnerable regions to the impacts of climate change, is possibly the least prepared and least able to cope compared to OECD countries. Yet, the amount of coal plants and fossil fuel infrastructure planned in the region is alarmingly high. This is in direct contrast to the fact that Asia is also the home of the most exciting technological innovation in clean energy. This is an action-oriented workshop to engage participants in the planning of strategies and activities that address climate change and accelerate the uptake of clean energy in the region.

The workshop will start with the presentation of two-three initiatives and then will divide the room into small working groups to answer the following questions:

- How can philanthropy and investors work closely together to unlock financing for climate change solutions? Are there specific opportunities for philanthropy to de-risk investments at an early stage in order to facilitate outcomes?

- What type of public-private partnerships can be fostered and advanced via AVPN and other partner networks in order to accelerate the pace and scale of climate action in Asia? In which sectors? Who can lead these types of partnerships?
- What's the role of asset managers to enable investors to reduce investors' exposure to climate change related financial risk (including stranded assets) and increase investment opportunities in clean energy
- How can AVPN mobilize its membership base to be a stronger and powerful voice for climate action? What type of activities and collective action should the network be undertaking with support from the membership? What kind of knowledge, tools, capacity are needed in order to make this work?

The Power of the Arts to Strengthen Communities, Create Sustainable Livelihoods and Drive Social Change

This session will discuss the role of Philanthropy and Social Investment in funding the Arts and Culture in Asia. It will look at the importance of fostering creativity and innovation through developing a wide-ranging arts and culture ecosystem.

It will look at the US and Europe who have had far more success in funding-raising from high net worth individuals and foundations to support their arts and culture programs. However, there has not been the same level of support for these programs in Asia and this session will look at both the cultural and structural reasons.

This session will also consider the role of artists and artisans in preserving the traditions and culture across Asia, and how this can lead to a livelihoods and job programs across the region.

Philanthropy and Impact Investing: Lessons on Scaling Impact toward Shifting Systems

The philanthropy and impact investing sectors have high ambitions for achieving impact, yet struggle to put in place the real practice and internal policy changes needed to collaborate more effectively and do real system-shifting programming.

This session will explore how funders are tackling the constraints to collaboration, and leveraging funds and non-monetary resources to support their partners. Panelists will draw on their experience in the following initiatives: RPA Scaling Solutions Initiative, RPA Sustainable Development Goals collaboration, the Synergos-Bloomberg Philanthropies Bangladesh Drowning Prevention project, and Skoll Foundation's portfolio approach to supporting social entrepreneurs. Panelists will provide a global perspective having tackled these challenges from the Bay Area to Beijing, Bogota, Accra and beyond. The workshop aims to spark discussions that continue throughout the conference and beyond.

Purpose-Driven Business Impact

The massive economic, social and environmental challenges our planet is facing require global action to achieve a more sustainable future. As the UN launched their Sustainable Development Goals to provide a global action plan for the development of our societies within the boundaries of the planet, the expectations rose also for companies to expand their activism on, and investment in the business-related issues that matter to their customers, employees and communities.

What is the role of corporations in advancing and addressing social and global challenges, both by minimizing negative impacts and maximizing positive impacts on people and the planet? Will the strong sense of purpose become the secret for business success as well as a necessity of business-survival? This panel will explore how companies are responding to the global call for more responsible business and discuss purpose-driven business strategies.

Unlocking the potential for Global Philanthropy

The value of philanthropy to society is growing worldwide and its complementary role to public action is no longer denied. In today’s borderless world, increasingly mobile citizens and corporations wish to support international causes and foreign charities or launch global philanthropic movements and campaigns. Cross-border giving has therefore become an ever-growing trend. However, despite the internationalization of the philanthropic sector, the global fiscal environment is still far from being satisfactory and few practical solutions have been developed to overcome these barriers. This session will present global trends in philanthropy and latest research on legal and fiscal barriers followed by discussing the needs of donors - individuals and corporations – as well as fundraisers to find solutions that enable and boost tax efficient, secure cross-border philanthropy and worldwide philanthropic initiatives.

Overcoming the Challenges of Hunger and Food Security across Asia

Each year, malnutrition claims the lives of almost 3 million children and costs the global economy over $3 trillion in lost productivity and health care costs. To counter this, on April 1, 2016, the United Nations General Assembly proclaimed a UN Decade of Action on Nutrition, to run from 2016 to 2025. The resolution calls for collaboration between a wide group of actors collaborative partnerships across disciplines and sectors are the way to build sustainable and resilient food systems.

These collaborations are necessary to combat the myriad of issues that insufficient nutrition creates across the Asia Pacific Region, whether it be the 2 billion people affected by Hidden Hunger, a lack or loss of dietary quality that leaves individuals or populations with deficiencies in essential micronutrients which negatively impact on health, cognition, function, survival and economic potential. Many countries in the region also still face high to very high incidents of stunting in their populations.

The issues are complex and interrelated, requiring collaborative solutions addressing production, consumption and utilization of nutritious food. We need innovative approaches to ensure food and nutrition security, including both quantity and quality. Quantity and quality are like two peas in a pod: they are intimately connected and must be considered together.

Healthcare and Impact Investment

People are living longer due to improved access to medicine and better control of infection diseases. At the same time, one billion people still lack access to healthcare services, especially in developing countries. Technological innovations have the potential in making break through as well as making access to healthcare more affordable. Similarly, as governments are overburdened by the healthcare costs, private capital, particularly impact investment can play an important role in financing innovative healthcare services. This session will discuss the opportunities and challenges in investing for impact in the healthcare sector and also showcase some specific cases of innovations in affordable healthcare in Asia.

Social Investment in Forest Ecosystem Services

Southeast Asia's forests contain some of the world's richest and most valuable resources and habitats; they provide goods such as timber, food and fuel and ecological functions such as nutrient cycling, carbon storage and water and air purification. Forests play a crucial role in fighting against climate change and have significant economic, ecological and social value, providing livelihoods for hundreds of millions of people, habitat for a wide range of plant and animal species and creating social impact along the value chain of forest products. Yet, Southeast Asian forests have the highest deforestation rates of all tropical regions and are particularly vulnerable to disturbance. Today's destruction of forest resources prevents future value generation from forest resources.

The immediate and apparent threats provide direct opportunities and needs for key stakeholders and investors to address forest degradation and catalyse investments to maintain and increase forest ecosystem services – while using forest resources. Achievement of a sustainable market with a magnitude that can provide long-term, durable and sustainable finance will require both mission- and business-driven solutions, as currently the funding pipeline is lacking concentrated effort and impact. This panel explores what is holding back on investments to forest ecosystem services, with the aim to develop a positive attitude toward collaborative action and long-term funding initiatives.

Financing Multisector Development Partnerships in Asia

Traditional development funding from developed nations and one-way “north-south” financing had largely consisted of grants and commercially structured infrastructure loans. With the shifting dynamics on the global political stage, more opportunities for cross-sector partnerships in funding and implementation are inspiring innovative instruments in the ecosystem, like development impact bonds, evidence based funding, sukuk development bonds, among others. Multisector partnership opportunities for development have been rapidly evolving to adapt to evermore complex issues to address.

This session will explore how corporates, development and aid organisations, foundations and impact investors are adopting new funding models to create more impactful partnerships. It will also explore the emergent opportunities for the Asian development funder and where Asia can leapfrog traditional approaches to deploy development capital in innovative ways.

Addressing Gender Inequality to Create Impact

Women's unequal participation in decision-making processes and labour markets compound inequalities and often prevent women from fully participating in the economy. However, studies have also shown that changing women's status requires addressing the norms and practices of all community members as women cannot hold up half the sky without engagement from the other half.

As more organisations begin to invest in gender-related policies, it is important to recognize and acknowledge various initiatives such as gender pay equity, sourcing from women-owned businesses, improving the skills and capabilities of women workers, developing unique products for women consumers and their impact of addressing the issue of gender inequality. This breakout session will bring different stakeholders together to understand constraints, barriers and opportunities women face in differing contexts across the region and how key stakeholders can help to shift the gender norms and the power structures.

Innovative Partnerships to Address Hunger Solutions

Kellogg believes in the power of partnerships – corporate, philanthropic, research, government – to direct their financial and non-financial resources to deliver measurable, tangible contributions to address hunger focusing on getting breakfast to more people globally, in particular we believe no child should go to school hungry. This workshop will examine case studies that illustrate successful approaches to solving this problem, one of the many in the nutrition sector, but that can offer transferable and scalable solutions to the other issues, like stunting and malnutrition that others are tackling. It looks to teach people how to ‘fish’ vs ‘giving them the fish’, thus providing sustainable and long-term solutions.

Policy Showcase: Policy Innovations to Maximise Impact (by invitation only)

Policy innovation is becoming a powerful approach to drive greater inclusive growth and to build resilient communities in Asia. New ideas are being explored in cross-sector collaboration by public, private and non-profit organizations to ensure the success of evidence-based social impact strategies. This approach covers a big range of initiatives from the set-up of national innovation systems to local/sector-driven innovative entrepreneurship and pro-poor strategies.

Based on feedback from AVPN's policy community on the kinds of policy initiatives they most wish to learn about, we will specially curate 4 policy initiatives to showcase to an invitation-only audience. Each policy initiative will share:

- Introduce the policy initiative and its objective in view of development goals
- Who are the stakeholders involved in this initiative and their interest
- The approach taken to design, draft and execute the policy
- Challenges/successes of this policy initiative, lessons learned, immediate next steps
- 3 questions to seek audience input on

This will be a highly curated session of productive sharing and discussions, drawing a cross-sector audience of specially invited director-level policymakers, AVPN members that represent funders, capacity-builders/enablers, and select social purpose organisations who are keen to build this body of knowledge.

Impactful CSR- A New Agenda Beyond Profit

With India being one of the first countries to mandate Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR), there is a growing interest among various stakeholders to see how the scenario is progressing.

While it can be acknowledged that the cumulative CSR spend has seemingly increased with more numbers of companies joining the league under the laws, there is a need to gauge whether CSR in the current form of understanding and practice is 'transactional' or is it gradually shifting towards more systematic integration of social and environmental responsibility with business development, thus making their investments more impactful.

This session will focus on understanding the practice of Corporate houses to view CSR as opportunities for significant shared value creation, their understanding and contribution towards the SDGs and the role of public policies in the overall ecosystem.

Strategic Philanthropy Today – Realizing its Potential Along the Continuum of Capital

In recent years, the social investing landscape globally has been increasingly dominated by discussions and initiatives relating to “impact investing” – often animated by the proposition that individuals and organizations aiming to address significant social challenges can “have it all” by accomplishing their aspirations while also earning healthy financial returns. Indications are that impact investing has changed the conventional wisdom about how social purpose organizations should be able to perform financially and attracted many more participants into the realm of social investment.

However, while that vision has undeniable allure, the amount of money deployed by philanthropists – ie. drivers of social change willing to give their money away toward that end – dwarfs the amount invested by those also seeking financial returns.

While the social investment world is changing and philanthropy maintains to have gravitas and relevance, these developments raise significant questions for philanthropists, whose only ROI is social impact.

Building the Education ecosystem

Education can be a powerful catalyst for societal change and is a critical input for every dimension of sustainable development. Over the last decades, countries around the world have made significant progress in expanding access to education. The newly adopted global education agenda (SDG4) has set even more ambitious targets concerning all levels of education and renewed focus on the quality of and relevance of learning. Yet, the education ecosystem is complex. It covers stages from early childhood education over primary and secondary education to lifelong learning, and draws upon organisations setting curricula, assessment, teacher training and school leadership and management. Funding from philanthropy over corporate funding to impact investing plays an important role in addressing these areas. Some of the questions to answer in this session are:

- What makes early childhood, primary and secondary education successful?
- What kind of funding is required for these segments?
- Where are the gaps for funding today and how can these be closed?

Speakers in this session come from India, China and Indonesia and present local innovations.

Funding opportunities in early childhood education

Early Childhood Education (ECE) for 2-5 year olds lays the foundation for lifelong learning. Yet, in many countries ECE is often outside the legally required education, as the compulsory school age often is at 5 years old. As a result, ECE is often private and unaffordable to many.

- How do private funders support ECE and what models are there to enable ECE to particularly the underserved?
- What are the opportunities for ECE funders?

The speakers from China, India and two global organisations on the ground and for funding will elaborate on this from their experience.

Skills Development for Sustainable Livelihoods in Asia

The Asia-Pacific region has made great strides in improving access to education, where primary school enrollment rates have shown differing yet generally rising trend. However ILO research shows that there persists a skills mismatch between young people finishing school and employers' needs. Labour force appears to be less than optimally tapped yet industries are visibly struggling to find suitable human capital. Youth unemployment and underemployment in ASEAN is at 13.6%, higher than that of South Asia (9.9%). These are conditions that affect livelihoods and security of this region. How can skills development better lead to sustainable livelihoods in the future? How will our solutions and challenges/opportunities differ between each country's desired development outcomes and target communities? What can corporates, capacity builders, funders, do differently to create better outcomes in this space?

Investing in Sustainable and Inclusive Cities

Today, more than half of the world's population lives in cities - and it's been forecasted that this will go up to 75% by 2050. Most of this population is located in Asia, with the South Asia subregion facing the fastest population growth. Fast urbanization may result in serious threats to urban citizen's health and wellbeing, employment opportunities, access to housing, access to public space, food security and waste management. Meanwhile, the North East Asia population is in decline leading to the transformation of cities so that they may provide the infrastructure and services for an ageing population, and also to attract young manpower.

With so much of the world's population now living in cities, sustainable development cannot be achieved without significant attention paid to how we build and manage our urban spaces. This was recognised in SDG 11 on sustainable cities and communities, which outlines that making cities safe and sustainable means that they are also participatory and inclusive. This session will provide participants with an overview of some of the leading regional programs and initiatives for sustainable and inclusive cities that show how investing in better urban planning and management helps to promote collaborative partnerships while creating social impact in Asia.

Making a difference? Making Impact Measurement Work

We all believe we are making a difference but are we really solving the problems we wanted to address? Are we making as much of a difference as we can?

There is no end of advice and guidance on impact measurement and there is increasing international agreement, across sectors, on how to measure impact. Despite this application remains variable and patchy and the data doesn't seem to be driving resource allocation decisions. And yet if we don't crack this challenge we probably won't be solving the problems and we won't be making as much of a difference as we can and need to.

Measuring our own performance is challenging but there is nothing more exciting than knowing your performance is really effective. This session will put some of the leading organisations on the spot and find out how they are answering these questions.

Financing the 'Missing Middle' in Southeast Asia

Micro, small and medium enterprises (MSMEs) are the backbone of Southeast Asian economies, making up 89%-99% of all enterprises and 52%-97% of total employment. The establishment of the ASEAN Economic Community (AEC) in 2015 necessitates inclusive growth for all, especially the MSME sector, as ASEAN continues to surge ahead as the third largest market in the world.

Nonetheless, MSMEs in the region are still facing formidable barriers in access to finance. There exists a sizeable 'missing middle' where MSMEs in early- to growth-stages remain underserved by financiers. Research by the ASEAN CSR Network, Oxfam and AVPN shows that this gap ranges from USD5,000 to USD200,000. The problem is even more pronounced for women entrepreneurs, who do not generally receive the same level of resources as men to tackle financial challenges.

This session will discuss ways in which mainstream and alternative financing mechanisms – from bank loans, venture capital, private equity to impact investment - can effectively fill the 'missing middle', especially as a mechanism to promote responsible and inclusive enterprises in Southeast Asia. Emphasis will also be given to technical support provided to entrepreneurs to grow their businesses.

Combating Gender based violence

It is estimated that 71% of the 40.3 million people in modern slavery are women and girls. Women in poverty, face multiple layers of difficulty in avoiding or escaping gender-based violence. They have lesser financial independence and fewer exit routes, and they often live amid longstanding social norms that at best turn a blind eye to the difficulties they face. The impact of gender based violence women’s employment and productivity have much broader repercussions for business and development.

The breakout session on gender based violence will examine the policy responses to these alarming trends, gender sensitive approaches implemented by the private sector and prevention and efforts to improve transparency being prioritized by various stakeholders’ businesses, investors and civil society organizations.

What's Next in Asian Social Investment

AVPN defines the social investment ecosystem as encompassing a full range of capital from grants to debt and equity all deployed for social impact. This session will further explore this concept by engaging key funders in Asia to share their view of social investing trends in Asia. The session will look at whether Asia is indeed evolving towards a perspective that considers how every kind of capital can be put towards social good. Panelists will reflect on their own organisation's journey as well as share new directions and emerging innovations that will shape the next 5 years of social investing in Asia.

DAY 3: WORKSHOPS

June 7

Corps and Business for Good

B Corporations are for-profit companies that use the power of business to solve social and environmental problems. They are certified by the non-profit B Lab to meet rigorous standards of social and environmental performance, accountability, and transparency. With large organizations such as Unilever and Patagonia being certified as businesses of good and the increased momentum around this movement, AVPN is organizing a workshop that will introduce the B Corp model and its key evaluation mechanism - the B Impact Assessment, enable attendees to assess how purpose and profit can coexist within a company through participatory learning exercises. The workshop will also equip participants with insights and practical tools that they can use to improve the social and environmental performance of their organizations

Pay for Success Models – Towards Better Philanthropic and Policy Outcomes

The Pay For Success (PFS) funding model has caught the interest of policymakers and funding community in Asia, leading to great interest in whether PFS can be adapted for use in the Asian context. This half-day workshop will leave participants with the why, what and how of deploying Pay For Success in Asia. It will:

- Examine case studies of recent pilots of the PFS model in Asia
- Understand the rationale for different stakeholders in advancing the PFS movement internationally and in Asia
- Demystify different financing instruments that have been used to advance PFS such as the Social Impact Bond, including case studies of urgent issues and key success factors
- Reveal the pioneering big data analytics tools that are currently being used to advance PFS at a systems level to influence billions of dollars of spending
- Facilitate a hands-on experience where participants will draw up an Asian PFS project and discuss potential concrete action steps towards creating a viable PFS ecosystem in their own jurisdictions

Policymakers, funders, and providers will have the unique opportunity to learn about this innovative model together in a cross-sector setting.

Instructor: Third Sector Capital Partners

Alternative Exits in Impact Investment

Impact investors intentionally select and manage investments to generate positive social or environmental impact, or both. In recent years, increased attention has been paid to the question of exits and, in particular, how investors and entrepreneurs attempt to safeguard the continuity of impact both through and beyond exit. In this workshop, we will discuss how investors have conceived of ways to ensure responsible exits at various stages of the investment process – starting as early as pre-investment all the way through to exit. We will also evaluate how entrepreneurs and investors have used traditional tools in new and innovate ways to provide liquidity without a sale. Case studies will be presented to ground ideas in practice.

Designing a Gender Lens Investing Action Plan: A Tool for Investment

Whether you are part of a foundation working to end poverty, a women's rights organization promoting gender equality in government policy, a donor agency who wants to invest in people who can better translate and bridge between gender and finance, or an impact investor who want to incorporate gender analysis, this workshop is designed to help you tackle your sticky problems in a safe space while simultaneously learning about and experimenting with ways you might use the systems of finance as a tool for social change.

This workshop will help participants leave with a new view on the systems of finance, some great ideas, and several strategies on how they can lever systems of finance as a tool for the social change that they would like to see in the world. Regardless of the starting place or experience level of the participants with the language and systems of finance, the workshop will be a bridge between those that speak finance and those who don't.
